

Nil doesn't eat the same way as the other Chiminis, who do so very slowly chewing well, in small meals three or four times per day. Nil devours casseroles, attacks the pantry and eats at any time with horrifying anxiety.

The greedy Chimini goes through narrower and narrower tunnels until he can barely pass through. Finally, the passage widens. The chamber is full of forest fruits, nuts and... honey! And there is a strange poster that says: "Only the most conscientious worm will be able to get out of the funnel."

When they heard him, the other Chiminis and some small animals came in the wink of an eye. "It serves you right for taking what is not yours and for not reading the signs," says the little mouse, angrily pointing at another sign:

"Eat using your head, otherwise you'll be trapped in the den."
